By HENRY M. NEELY

"Blank"—That's all right. I haven't got it back now. I'm giad you're sensities from for Gareth Hughes. Lots of people think he's great. I don't: that's lad enough. Tell me one thing: when all. I think he is perhaps perfectly you trolley through Jersey, what else is satisfactory in the kind of thing he does there to look at? and I'm willing to leave him alone so long as he sticks to those second-rate things, but when he gets into so beau-tiful a thing as "Sentimental Tommy." then he must expect to be judged by the highest standards of art-and he and Waily Reid! In my opinion they esn't measure up. I'll modify that are both pleasing actors, not above the and say that, so far as my personal judgment is concerned, he doesn't measure up. Yes, I know Herbert Howe praised him extravagantly and Mr. Howe knows more about movies than I'll ever know. But I'm nevertheless convinced that Gareth's weakness in the part was to blame for much of the coldness with which the public received conceit. Surely you cannot call either Rudy or Wally handsome. Speaking of a regular fellow, where can you see more perfect and finished acting than in Conrad Nagel? No pretty boy, understand, but a man of wonderful personality and without conceit. Surely you could not call him convinced that Garcil's weakness in of wonderful personality and without coldness with which the public received conceit. Surely you could not call him an otherwise remarkable production. an otherwise remarkable production.
